

For this sprint we decided to do the Google Integration front-end and some other small things. We really overestimated the difficulty of the Google Integration. We assigned too few story points to that card, and we ended up increasing the story points of that card during the sprint. The Google integration is not done yet but we finished the rest. Our teamwork during this sprint was better than the other sprints, merging went way better than in the previous sprints and we were able to discuss conflicts with each other better and better during this project, because we really started to know each other better and realized who is who in the belbin roles. Over all, we are content with how the sprint went, we did make quite a lot of improvements although we could not do everything we hoped we could do. But now we know for the next time that Google integration is not as straightforward as it seems.
